The Munich Demo Project, part of the E2ReBuild initiative, showcases the renovation of a social housing estate in Munich. The project included increasing living space, improving energy efficiency, and incorporating sustainable construction practices. The buildings were transformed into modern residential units with green roofs, passive-building standards, and renewable energy sources. The project received positive feedback from tenants and professionals and was well-received internationally. Lessons learned from the project include the importance of thorough pre-analysis, effective communication, and collaboration with contractors. The project also emphasizes the potential for replication in other European cities to achieve sustainable building practices and overall economic efficiency.
